

Market Statistics: January-September 2022

Home Sales:

The housing market sales activity continued to weaken though September, which can be explained by a combination of the normal autumn market slowdown combined with low listing activity and increasing interest rates.

Home Prices:

The rapid growth in home prices has stabilized over the past several months. Year to date, home values have increased, but will most likely end the year less dramatically than in 2020 and 2021.

Inventory:

Although home sales have slowed, so have the number of listings. This has kept supply numbers very tight, so although there are buyers that are still able to afford homes, the lack of choice is still a struggle.

Interest Rates: September 29, 2022, 6.7% for a 30-year fixed

Mortgage interest rates are always changing, and there are a lot of factors that can sway the interest rate: federal policy changes, the lending institution, and even the borrower's credit score. Recently it has been the actions taken by the Federal Reserve to get inflation under control which has led mortgage rates to more than double since the start of the year.

While mortgage interest rates at 7% or 8% are an adjustment for buyers who have participated in the housing market in the last 10 years, they don't come close to the rates buyers experienced in the 80's and 90's. What is more significant is that the Federal Reserve hiked its benchmark interest rate by 75 basis points—the largest increase since 1994—only to repeat that step again in July and September. How aggressive will they have to get to achieve their goals?
